Need for Performance Testing Evident as Cattle Business Grows

As progress is made in the feeder cattle business in Virginia, the need for performance testing will be more evident, says L. B. Allen of the animal husbandry department at V.P.I.

Heifers form topp producting cows will have to be put back in the herd, and Beef Cattle Improvement Association records can be an important tool in selecting the right ones.

Work done by the BCIA also has helped take some of the gamble out of bull buying through its bull testing program at Culpeper and on farms, says Allen.

There are six important records to consider in evaluating a performance tested bull. These include the production record of the dam and sire, the pedigree or bloodlines, preweaning record of the calf, the feed test performance, and the lifetime growth and type score of the individual bull.

Information on the bulls in the Virginia BCIA performance tested program is the most complete available anywhere in the United States, according to the specialist.

Allen says, "Now that most of the 1961 calves have arrived, its a good time for thecalf producer to take a look and see where he stands. Are your cows producing calves that will make a profit? Has the present bull maide improvements in this year's calf crop? The Virginia BCIA can help answer these and other questions for you."

For further information on beef cattle performance testing, contact county agents, or the animal husbandry department at VPI, Blacksburg. There is still time to enroll herds this year, says Allen.
